No one believed that the NSA was collecting all the phone calls of everybody in the Bahamas, but it was happening. Again, just like the Smurf tools used by the GCHQ in the United Kingdom, these code named espionage tools and pieces of equipment were very scary to learn about for many people as they proved that NSA agents had access to gear that could make surveillance incredibly easy for them and almost entirely undetectable for their targets. Director of National Intelligence James Clapper said that I had accelerated the adoption of an encryption by seven years.
