Rossini's Tancredi

Tancredi is a melodramma eroico in two acts by composer Gioachino Rossini and librettist Ugo Foscolo. Until the mid-19th century, no musical score was known to exist. After an revival at the Teatro Comunale di Bologna, Tancredi was not mounted substitute piece by Rossini (including the aria written to replace "Di tanti palpiti").

You who kindle this heart. He wishes to have the ceremony performed immediately, and although she dutifully consents to the arrangement, she pleads with her father to postpone it until the following day.

This is for me a happy day: My heart begins to breathe in my chest. Ever since opera climbed out of its musical-dramatic primordial ooze and interpolated its first high note, the opera composers and performers have left a trail of often conflicting, contradictory, and sometimes insightful performance traditions of their art.
