Now eight interlocutors are present: Bargo and Michele from Part 1, a woman called Selvaggia, the composers Parabosco and Perissone, Domenichi and Ottavio Landi from Piacenza, and the composer Claudio Veggio, who seems to have been connected with both cities. In this same spirit of mental and physical interplay, Klopp presents an interesting discussion of the "textualization of the body and the accompanying corporalization of the text"

This was achieved, these historians claim, despite the absence of an explicit demonstration that Pulci actually read or contemplated theories of history in his supposed attempt to formulate his. Jorgi's paralysis is the result of a crisis of conscience, a reflection of his psychological immobility and his inability to fully break with a past which he claims to have rejected.
