Within the larger context of the Cold War, economic division was tantamount to political division. In the case of Japan, these frictions have manifested themselves as historical issues. While surveys show a principled skepticism against the recourse to arms as a way to solve international conflicts, they also demonstrate a limited willingness for self-defense with conventional weapons 44 Forced Reorientation.

Politische Signaturen, so die Annahme, sind stets als Umschriften und Rekonstruktionen zu verstehen.
