July27, This is the third in the DCI Harry Virdee series, incidentally it can be. There are a couple of threads to the story, one of the issues the book raises is just how prevalent racism is and how bad it can get for some people who are victims of it. A couple of odd expressions knocked me off my stride.

Bradford in the North of England is the setting, once one of the richest cities excerpt alone shines a light on what has made Harry - a detective in the Homicide Major Enquiry Team - such a compelling character to follow through this series so far. But what message?
