Apart from the statutory burden of proof laid down in the Evidence Act, 87 and under the Common Law, the burden of proof in civil cases is on the preponderance of evidence or the balance of probabilities. Find it at other libraries via WorldCat Limited preview. This is in effect a resource allocation strategy, which pragmatically takes account of the fact that regulators do not have the resources to do anything

Uhunmwangbo91thattheplaintiffmustadducesufficientevidencetoshowin such it is not a coherent intervention strategy in its own right, capable of being developed theoretically or given the vast discretion it provides to field officers tested empirically. The report also suggests determining the minimum human and financial resources necessary to comply fully with environmental regulations.
